The New European School, according to the “Europe 2020” strategy, requires the acquisition of such Key Competences as the Digital Competence, the Foreign languages, the Math Competence, the reinforcement of the Social and Civic competences (active citizenship), the sense of initiative and entrepreneurship, the cultural awareness and expression. In general, this new type of European school seeks the empowerment of the 21st century key competences such as cooperation, communication, creativity, problem solving and “Learning how to learn”.

In addition, the orientation of European Educational streams towards computer assisted teaching models can effectively contribute to the achievement of this goal.

The flipped classroom, the e-differentiated instruction, the multidisciplinary teaching approaches which exploit computational thinking in problem solving, the augmented reality educational systems, the educational approaches for teaching Robotics, the game implementation methods by using Web2.0 applications as well as the teaching of Foreign Languages or History in cooperative learning environments are some of the approaches that lead the way.

At the training, innovative ICT teaching approaches, considered to promote all key competences a 21st century European citizen should possess, will be presented.

The training is organized by the Directorate of Secondary Education of Messinia in cooperation with the University of Peloponnisos, the Directorate of Primary Education of Messinia, the Municipality of Kalamata and the FARIS Municipal enterprise
